Miss Moody's Tudor Tea Room

This Tea Room was originally owned by Miss Mabel Ada May Moody (May as she preferred to be called) in the 1930s and after World War 2. She was the eldest surviving daughter of nine children born at the end of the 19th Century to Charles and Matilda Moody. Charles Moody had built the Victorian property that stretches between this tea room and the street front to provide for his rapidly expanding family, as well as a shop and a cellar forge for his business as gunsmith and cutler.

Early in the 20th Century Charles acquired all of the buildings, known by then as Church Court, that lay behind his shop and family home and which extended as far as the small stream at the bottom of King John's Garden. In 1927 she was at the point of identifying King John's House as a 13th-century building just as her father died, leaving the business to his only surviving son, William. William and Mabel, together with their younger sisters, Rosa and Alice, all lived together in the Victorian house-cum-shop. They never married. Miss Moody opened King John's House to the public and later opened a tea room where the present one is.

The history of the Moody family is told in the Moody Museum, part of King John's House and Museum. The Museum includes a recreation of the Moody gun shop as it would have been seen before it closed for the last time in the 1970's. The Museum was established by Test Valley Borough Council and is now operated by King John's House and Tudor Cottage Trust, which is a registered charity and custodian of King John's House and the Tudor Cottage, which is home to Miss Moody's Tudor Tea Room.

Miss Moody's Tudor Tea Room is operated by Miss Moody's Tudor Tea Room Ltd.
